

Exeter Cathedral School

16/02/10

As part of a regeneration plan, Exeter Cathedral School approached bright* to supply new stage curtains for their school hall.

bright* supplied a new set of coloured stage curtains complete with a hand pulled track plus border and stage fixings.

Joe Rockett (Project Manager for bright*) visited the school in order to understand their precise needs, and offered a number of different system options for consideration.

bright* recommended a Dimlan material for the main curtains, offering the school a selection of colours from which to choose from. The material was chosen due its durability and fire retardency , whilst the stage tracking system was from Halls T60 range of products which are a cost effective option for the smaller stage where curtain sizes are limited but offers a strong and solid construction making it appropriate for demanding environments within educational facilities.

In order to fit to a budget, bright* supplied the materials and worked alongside the schools own maintenance department to fit the system.

“The new system completely transformed the look of the hall” commented Rockett. “The new facilities give the hall a new degree of professionalism and will no doubt benefit the school productions”.
